After a long or stressful day, how do you typically unwind? Describe what that looks like for you.

Can you describe your typical Friday afternoon? For example, what errands or work activities would you be doing. Please be as specific as possible.

Imagine this happens: You call to schedule with an otologist, and the scheduler says the earliest opening is 14 months away. When you ask how that's possible, she says, "We used to train 20 fellows a year, but after the NIH cut our T32 grant, we can only train 12 now. That means fewer otologists graduating, and our wait times have tripled." Over the next months, Friday afternoons get harder. While finishing lesson plans, the ringing in your ears competes with the classroom HVAC, and you reread student emails because words blur when people speak too fast. At the grocery store, turning your head down an aisle brings a quick tilt in the floor, so you steady yourself on the cart. After dinner, your walk gets shorter; uneven sidewalks make you slow down and look at your feet. Even easy TV needs captions now, volume nudged up three clicks.
